Didsbury athletes help carry Olympic flame

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

When Harley Dickinson, 60, received an e-mail announcing he'd be one of 12,000 select Canadians to carry the Olympic torch, he thought it a scam.

"I thought all the torchbearers had already been picked...and it wasn't like someone called you to say you were doing this. It came up online," he said.

"I was pretty sure it was a joke."

The Grade 1 teacher at Ross Ford Elementary, applied to be a torchbearer through Coca-Cola, a corporate sponsor of the 2010 Olympic Games.

The company was holding an online contest to find 4,500 environmentally conscious and athletic individuals to carry the flame. Dickinson, who inspires his students to get active, as well as participates in team sports himself, said it didn't take long for Coca-Cola to convince him he had won a spot in the relay.

"They just kept sending me T-shirts and messages and...then I heard (another person) in Didsbury was going too...I realized this was for real."

Torchbearers, who were also chosen by the Royal Bank of Canada and VANOC, the organizing committee for the 2010 Games, began the relay on October 30 in Victoria.

The flame will travel to more than 1,000 communities between now and February, even reaching the tip of Canada's far north. This is the longest domestic torch relay in Olympic history.

Dickinson will be running a 300 metre leg between Osoyoos, B.C. and Kelowna on January 25. He isn't yet sure what time he will be starting the jog or where about on the route he will start.

The town he is running in came as a surprise to the Didsbury resident, who originally asked to participate in the Crossfield to Calgary route. His class has been closely following the relay - using a piece of yarn to trace the route Canadians have already travelled. He wanted to bus them - and others at the school - down to the relay so they could watch their own teacher participate. They can't do that now.

"I balked a little bit because the school can't go...but then I thought about it, like gee this is a once-in-a-lifetime thing, so what if I go to Osoyoos."

Principal Brent Runnett plans to travel to the B.C. town with Dickinson to videotape the event and cheer him on.

Dickinson has bought the $350 torch as a memento of "this once-in-a-lifetime event" and when he arrives back in Didsbury, he will bring it to the school to share his experience of the run.

He is slightly disappointed the torch will have its fuel canister removed after his relay.

"I would have liked to light it up again and make a run around the gym," he said.

Remi Christianson, 44, was also picked by Coca-Cola to run and like Dickinson, she will be travelling for the jaunt. She leaves next week for Prince Edward Island.

"I had hoped from the beginning that I'd get this but I also knew it was a long shot...I was so happy when I got the email," she said.

"I will be running in Bedeque, P.E.I., 10 minutes from my mother's home."

Running in P.E.I. was not her first choice. She would have liked to run in one of the 73 communities in Alberta that are on the route, but this will bring her back to her hometown, where friends and family can watch her run.

Veteran repaired flying boats overseas

BY TAMARA
CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

When he thinks back to the Second World War, veteran Tom Patterson, 87, considers himself lucky.

He didn't dodge bombs or shoot enemy soldiers, lie in muddy trenches or carry heavy equipment on his back. And he didn't die overseas, like many of his friends.

He was "very safe" in an isolated air base in Northern Ireland, as an engine repairman for flying boats in 1944. Though his efforts were every bit as important as the boys engaged in combat.

"A lot of people remember the bombers or the pilots, but the ground crew is forgotten. We had an important job to do too," he said.

The ground crew maintained the flying boats, a specialized form of aircraft designed to take off and land on water, using its fuselage as a floating hull. Seven or eight men on the craft would circle the Atlantic Ocean for 10-hour shifts, searching for enemy submarines.

As far as Patterson remembers, they never found any. They did lose a plane during patrol, however. Eight men died.

"Those planes had a lot of fuel on them and the motors weren't the best, if anything went wrong they would crash," he said.

"They depended on us to do our job and get anything that needed fixin' done. It was an important job."

When the planes came back after every shift, Patterson would have to go out onto the water to do an inspection, fuel up and fix any engine problems. It was a slippery job. In the beginning, a lot of the men crawled out onto the floating aircraft.

When he joined the air force at 20 years old, Patterson was stationed in Brandon, Ontario. He, like many of the boys, was drawn to serve by a mix of patriotism and pragmatism.

"Those were the horse and buggy days, not too many cars around...people couldn't afford it. That is why a lot joined up, it was after the Dirty 30s and to get clothes, meals and a few dollars to spend was a big deal," he said.

In Brandon, pilots from across the globe would arrive for training and it gave him a thirst to see more of the world. It didn't matter to him one way or another if he was posted to a remote base or one in the midst of combat. Fixing planes is all the same, he said.

He flew from Canada to England and from there took a boat to Ireland. It was October and the sea was rough. It didn't help any that the boat zigzagged through the ocean to avoid enemy ships.

"One night it'd be cold, the next warm, because they kept moving from the south to the north. We were all by ourselves out there so we had to avoid submarines," Patterson said.

The constant motion of the ship didn't make him sick, although he couldn't say the same for his fellow passengers - war brides from England.

They looked "pretty rough," he said.

"The patrol...it was pretty good out there. Ireland was only bombed once during all the war," Patterson said.

"When I was on leave, I applied to do the same thing in the Pacific War but I was never called in."

Homefront should be honoured

JOYCE MULLEN

BY TAMARA
CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

Joyce Mullen wanted to serve overseas during the Second World War, but as one of the hardest working corporals in the air force post system the government thought she could do more at home. She was not alone.

Some of the most talented civilian and military men and women were told they could do more for their country from Canada than they could overseas. And although those men and women received recognition and praise from their countrymen then, they are largely forgotten for their contribution today.

"Women worked in munitions factories, farmers produced food to feed soldiers overseas, children collected scrap metal and retired men went back to work," said Dr. Pat Brennan, professor of history at the University of Calgary Centre of Military and Strategic Studies.

"At the time people knew how important these jobs were... and that they were just as much a part of the war effort as those fighting overseas."

Today, we are more interested in combatants - the bombings or D-Day landing - than we are in the mechanic in Winnipeg, he said.

"People need to realize this whole generation are veterans of the war. They all made sacrifices and contributions," Brennan said.

Mullen, nee Morgan, was a 19-year-old girl when the war broke out overseas. As the daughter of a military man, she wanted to do her part to turn the tide of the conflict.

In 1943 she volunteered for the Royal Canadian Air Force Women's Division, taking on a job in the post system. If a soldier were going to get his mail, she would be the one to give it to him.

"We had boys in the air

Relay

Her husband and four children also plan to be there when she grips the sleek, white torch, November 23 at 8:15 a.m.

"This is an opportunity to be a part of the 2010 Olympic Games in a small way. To join in the excitement and dream of what athletes train for their whole life," she said.

Christianson isn't sure why she was singled out. She is an everyday Canadian, who volunteers with the Zion Evangelical force from Australia and New Zealand...Yanks too. We had them from all over and boy, mail was what they looked for," she said.

"One sergeant's wife wrote to him every day, never without fail...it was his connection to home."

Mullen worked in Vancouver, Victoria and Comox during her stint in the military and remembers two things clearly - it was a tough place for women and it was near impossible to get overseas.

Not long after she received her corporal hooks, she saw a post overseas for leading airwoman. She went to her officer and said she'd take off her hooks if it meant getting the job.

But the officer just looked at her and said, "We can't spare you Morgan. You're a good Joe, you keep your nose clean. No one will ever talk to you like that."

A year later, she was sent to the air base in Comox, where men outnumbered women 1,000 to 50 and was assigned second in command to the sergeant at the post office.

"I hadn't been there a week and he knew darn well I could run that place with my hand tied behind my back...so he put me second in charge," she said.

"That brought up a few things at the post office. It was one girl and five men and they did not like the idea of a woman having an authority. They just did not like it."

One man, a letter carrier, did everything he could to make her lose her temper. She suspects he was trying to get her to put him on a charge so he could make a fool out of her in front of her commanding officers.

Mullen never did lose her cool.

She had learned early on how tough the military could be on a woman.

When she was training at Manning Depot in Toronto, 1943, she was called to escort her girlfriend on a charge.

Her friend had been a secretary for a commanding officer in Claresholm and was told if she joined the Royal Canadian Air Force Women's Division she would get her corporal hooks upon graduation and a posting back at Claresholm.

"I bet you dollars to doughnuts, the women's division kept an eye on that girl, because they didn't want to give her hooks...for heaven's sakes no one got their hooks when they graduated," Mullen said.

Her friend left the depot with her cousin to visit friends in Ottawa and missed the returning bus - violating curfew. When the officer in charge heard the girls missed the bus, he sent out a taxi and told the military police not to report the girls. It wasn't their fault they were late.

"But the police did report it and my friend was charged," Mullen said.

She watched as officers berated the girl, took away her hooks and posting and sent her to Aylmer, Ontario.

"It wasn't fair, but you can't argue with the brass...she was never the same after that," she said.

"I said to myself, Morgan, keep your temper and your nose clean. No one will ever talk to you like that."

Brennan, who has studied women in the Second World War, said it was tough to break into the boys' club in the air force, navy and army. Society was patriarchal and women's main role was still to help the war effort from home and they should be recognized. It's tragic that we haven't really done that," he said.

"People busted their butt to help the war effort from home and they should be recognized. It's tragic that we haven't really done that," he said.

"We are not only losing our veterans, but everyone on the home front - that whole generation. If we don't thank the woman who served, the factory worker and the farmer, it will be too late."

The military made an allowance for women in 1942 when it found itself with a manpower shortage. The thought was that if they could replace men doing jobs like clerking or cooking, with

Identity theft law welcome

DAN SINGLETON

A new federal law that gives police and justice officials more power to fight the growing scourge of identity theft and fraud is good news for all law-abiding Canadians.

As with drug trafficking, identity theft has become a mainstay of organized crime across this country, with gangsters often targeting seniors and vulnerable members of society, stealing their life savings and causing them distress, inconvenience and hardship.

That being the case, any and all efforts aimed at helping do away with this growing new offence are certainly worthwhile.

"It will better address identity theft and provide police with the tools they need to help stop these crimes before they are committed," said Justice Minister Rob Nicholson. "This legislation is another achievement in implementing our government's tackling-crime agenda."

The law creates three new Criminal Code offences targeting the early stages of identity-related crime, all subject to five-year maximum prison sentences. Those crimes are:

- Obtaining and possessing identity information with the intent to use the information deceptively, dishonestly or fraudulently in the commission of a crime;

- Trafficking in identity information, an offence that targets those who transfer or sell information to another person with knowledge of, or recklessness as to, the possible criminal use of the information;

- Unlawfully possessing or trafficking in government-issued identity documents that contain information of another person.

One of the highlights of the new law is the provision that allows judges to order offenders to pay restitution to victims of identity fraud for costs associated with efforts to rehabilitate the stolen identity, including the cost of replacement cards, documents and correcting credit history.

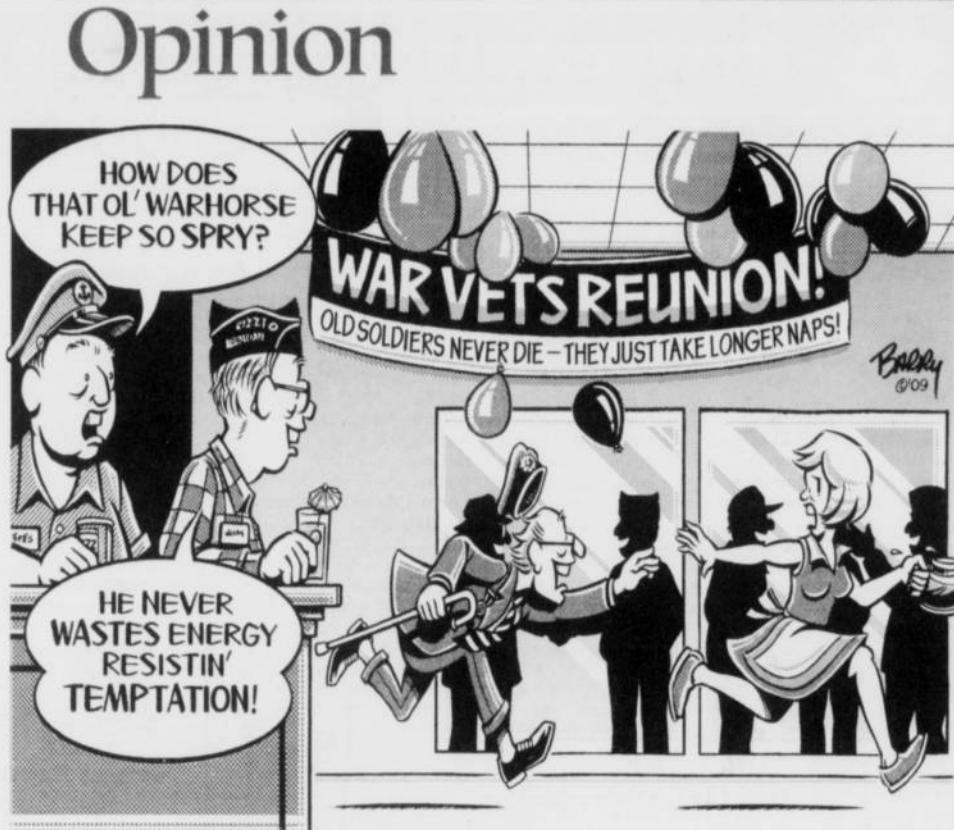

"Canadians must be assured that their identities and personal information are being protected from illegal use," says MP Daniel Petit, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice.

If people start to lose confidence in the security of their confidential information, their personal security is compromised – and that is simply unacceptable.

As such, making life harder for organized criminals who use stolen information "deceptively, dishonestly or fraudulently" is in everyone's best interest.

Hopefully other government anti-crime legislation now before the House, including legislation that would provide an automatic jail time for fraud over $1 million, and another bill that would eliminate conditional sentences, including house arrest, for those convicted of serious property crimes, including fraud, also move forward and become law.

While the Harper government's handling of a number of issues, including reform of the Employment Insurance system, has been anything but universally applauded, its current efforts to fight organized crime are right on the mark.

Bill-50 illuminates the unqualified

The Alberta Electricity System Operator (AESO) is proposing that Albertans cough up for an additional $16.5 billion to pay for new transmission lines so that Alberta can become a net exporter of electricity. This proposal would increase Alberta's transmission infrastructure, valued at $2.1 billion, by eight-fold. If Bill 50 is passed, the government will have the authority to arbitrarily approve any, or all, of the $16.5 billion request, without giving any public notice, or holding any public hearing process.

Many of the MLAs debating Bill 50 in the legislature do not understand the technical components of an electricity transmission system. The lack of understanding has created a delusional support for Bill 50. The government claims that Bill 50 is necessary because Alberta's electricity transmission system is leaking energy and costing Albertans $250 million a year. Albertans are also told we haven't upgraded our transmission system in over 20 years. Are these valid reasons to warrant spending billions of dollars to upgrade the transmission system?

A transmission line has a physical lifespan of about 70-80 years. Without any corroborating evidence to support additional upgrades to the system, a 20-year time lapse since the last upgrade is inconsequential. The $250 million dollar figure is an exaggeration, and it was sensationally calculated by multiplying $87 a megawatt (MW) to an estimated total yearly net loss. The actual cost of a megawatt is closer to $45.

Regardless of the estimated dollar value, increasing Alberta's investment in transmission lines by eight-fold, because the total yearly net loss is estimated to be $250 million is nonsensical. The logic is similar to a cab company increasing its fleet of vehicles from two to 16 because the two existing cabs each consume $6,000 in fuel each year. If the two existing cabs are the most fuel efficient vehicles, how can the total fuel consumption possibly be reduced with the addition of 16 vehicles?

Transmitting electricity over any distance results in a certain amount of loss; the longer the transmission distance, the greater the loss. Generators add electricity to the system, but they also add loss to the system. Simply stated, the more electricity generated during the year, the more total yearly net loss!

Transmission losses are unavoidable and inevitable. So what denotes a normal functioning system; how is it evaluated?

Regardless of how much electricity is transmitted, industry experts claim that a normal transmission system should experience losses in the range of five to seven per cent. Alberta's electricity transmission system actually is operating significantly better than the average transmission system. The losses for the years 2007, 2008, and 2009 YTD measured at 4.1 per cent, 3.8 per cent, and 3.5 per cent respectively. These loss numbers are actually outstanding!

So will building $16.5 billion of new transmission lines actually reduce the total yearly net loss and the (overinflated) $250 million cost to Albertans each year? It is highly probable that adding more transmission lines will actually increase the total net loss on a yearly basis. As a matter of fact, if the percentage loss factor remained below the five to seven per cent range, Albertans would celebrate the doubling of the total yearly net losses. Why? It would mean our economy was growing and thriving exponentially. Of course, if we spend billions of dollars for transmission lines unnecessarily, the unnecessary expenditures could have a significant burden on the rate-paying public, and a negative effect on our economy.

Transmission losses need to be evaluated in terms of efficiency, not in terms of sensationalized dollar values based on unavoidable total yearly net losses. The government's justifications for Bill 50 are hollow, and reflect their lack of expertise and understanding. Independent technical engineering experts need to weigh in on this debate, and Bill 50 prevents this from happening. Bill 50 should be withdrawn and the regulatory process should be respected. We need an objective and independent public process for approving transmission lines based on the needs of Albertans.

Green school snags town's interest

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

The dream of a Calgary engineer to build the first permaculture centre in Alberta, could make this town boom.

Rob Avis, owner of Ravis Sustainable Consulting, is looking to Didsbury as a possible location for green schooling and if chosen, could help expand local business and job opportunities.

Not to mention, it will put the latest in eco-friendly technology at the fingertips of residents.

"This community is definitely very progressive and looking to incur business and opportunity that will attract others...and this could do that," said Brittany Hutton, manager of infrastructure and planning.

"This is something that we could all benefit from.”

The education centre would teach its students about permaculture, which among other things includes growing your own food and building eco-friendly homes.

The design of the school is still in planning stages but could include indoor classrooms and outdoor gardens that would help to teach students ways to improve the world we live in.

"We can't keep up with demand for this type of knowledge...there is definitely a desire to learn about this kind of thing."

Ron Berezan, owner of the business, isn't surprised at all. He said this kind of design system is the cutting edge for ecological alternatives.

"We are an innovative province...why not have this? The timing is right. People are ready for this," he said.

"Five years ago people didn't even know the word permaculture. That's changed. This is really gaining ground."

Didsbury isn't the only option for Avis to build this centre. He is looking at other locations across Alberta, including Olds. A decision on where to base the school will come next year.

"I am attracted to Didsbury because it's moving forward and there is a green movement gaining ground here, but we

Health officials invite new groups to H1N1 clinic

BY TAMARA
CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

Children under age 10 with chronic disease and parents of infants under six months are the latest groups to be vaccinated under the revamped H1N1 program.

Alberta's medical superboard ended its welcome all vaccine policy last week when the manufacturer of the vaccine slowed production and mass clinics were inundated with people.

Clinics were shut down for four days, beginning Sunday, as the province came up with a revised strategy that would target segments of high-risk groups.

Youngsters, between the age of six months and five years, were the first to get the shot when clinics reopened Thursday. Parents had to show proof of their children's ages or they were turned away.

On Friday, the program was expanded to include pregnant women as 28,000 non-adjuvant vaccines were shipped into the province.

Everyone else, including emergency workers and people with chronic health problems, has been told to wait until more vaccine becomes available.

"We are trying to reach priority groups one at a time until we (get) everybody and then we will open to the rest of the public," said Dr. André Corriveau, Alberta's chief medical officer of health.

It is unknown when that will be, though Corriveau believes the majority of people will be immunized before Christmas.

He said young children are most at risk for hospitalization and pregnant women can lose their baby if infected, which is why they were chosen as the first at-risk groups to get the shot.

Beginning today, the province is adding two new eligible groups to its list, including both parents - or one parent and one caregiver - of a child under six months, and all children under the age of 10 with health conditions like diabetes. The babies themselves cannot be immunized but risk becoming seriously ill if their parents bring the flu home.

And like earlier clinics, parents will have to bring proof of their children's age and health condition. Caregivers must also arrive with a photo ID and letter from parent or guardian confirming their role.

Alberta health officials expect immunizations of 46,000 parents or caregivers will protect 23,000 infants under six months old. There should be enough vaccine to inoculate everybody in the group with a shipment of 237,000 expected this week.

As more vaccine arrives, additional groups will join the list of those eligible to get the shot.

Since the flu first hit Canada this spring, there have been a total of 25 deaths in Alberta. Health officials reported five over the weekend - two in the Edmonton area, one in Calgary and two in southern part of the province. The majority of deaths were associated with pre-existing medical problems.

The next shots available in Didsbury are November 18, from 9 to 7:30 and November 24, 9:30.

Didsbury recognized as leader

BY TAMARA
CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

All eyes were on Didsbury's sustainable action plan last month as municipal leaders recognized it as a leading example for small communities.

During the International City/County Management Association, a panel participant presenting on sustainability plans commended several towns across Canada and the U.S. for noteworthy programs. Didsbury was one of them.

"I wanted to highlight communities who are doing it right no matter how big or small they are," said Maggie Ullman, energy coordinator for the City of Asheville, North Carolina.

"It was clear Didsbury...didn't follow a script or cookie-cutter program. It figured out what was best for its residents and customized the plan accordingly. That is why it's noteworthy."

Sustainability plans have become the cornerstone for planning in cities and towns and are especially important in small communities, Ullman said.

Hamlets, villages and towns have always struggled to remain viable centres in the wake of an exodus of youth and shrinking business bases. A long-term, proactive strategy allows municipalities to plan ahead 20 years but begin to take steps now to reach future goals.

In essence it gives communities a step-by-step strategy that guards against the town's demise.

Important update on the H1N1 vaccine

Due to the unexpected national shortage of the H1N1 vaccine, Alberta Health Services has begun a targeted plan to provide immunization to high-risk groups.

For the most current information on the staged vaccination campaign, including clinic dates and high-risk groups eligible for vaccination, go to our website:

www.albertahealthservices.ca

Or call Health Link Alberta • Toll-free: 1-866-408-5465
Edmonton: 780-408-5465 • Calgary: 403-943-5465

PLEASE NOTE:

Immunization will not be available to the general public while there is a shortage of H1N1 vaccine. Because of the shortage, proof of age (Health Care Card or birth certificate) must be provided.

To ensure access for all of those in high-risk groups, no exceptions can be allowed. More high-risk groups will be immunized as more vaccine becomes available, followed by the general public.

Ullman said she has seen municipalities fall off the map because they didn't take steps to plan for the future. A lot of these places - like those in New York State - disappear completely as poverty and lacklustre job sources push residents out and into larger city centres.

"More leaders need to take stock of the problem and create some kind of strategy, as Didsbury has, to remain viable," Ullman said.

Brittany Hutton, manager of infrastructure and planning, helped to develop the local sustainability plan three years ago and said that it feels awesome to have the program recognized.

"I think this province is really leading the way in sustainability and Didsbury is no exception to that," she said.

"This plan reflects the needs of our community on all levels - socials, arts and culture, environmental and economic - so we can plan for...20 years from now."

Part of the sustainability plan is already in motion, including creating a new plan to manage wastewater. The town is currently looking into a mechanical treatment plant and lagoon combination project for 2010.

Police continue to investigate a fatal collision involving a semi-truck on the QEII between Didsbury and Carstairs last Thursday evening.

The incident was one in a series of motor vehicle incidents that kept emergency crews busy on Carstairs' two main highways last week.

The collision occurred north of the Carstairs overpass by the Westcott Road junction shortly after 6 p.m. Airdrie RCMP say several 9-1-1 calls were made to police from drivers reporting a vehicle travelling on the wrong side of the road, heading northbound in the southbound lanes of the QEII.

Officers from the Airdrie RCMP Traffic Services and Didsbury RCMP were dispatched to intercept the vehicle.

Before officers could reach the vehicle, the car collided with a fully loaded southbound semi-truck. The force of the impact forced the semi and car through the highway median, across the eastbound ditch, across the accompanying service road, finally coming to rest in the service road's east ditch next to a farmer's field.

The vehicle and semi-truck caught on fire after coming to rest, sparking a small grass fire in an adjacent farmer's field.

Police say that several passing motorists pulled over and rushed to the aid of the drivers involved, but the driver of the car, a senior from Calgary, had already died from his injuries. The driver of the semi-truck was found uninjured.

Fire and EMS crews were dispatched from Didsbury and Carstairs to the scene.

Both sides of the highway were reduced to one lane as the scene was cleaned up.

Police are continuing to investigate the collision and say that no charges are expected in the incident.

RCMP is asking for anyone who may have witnessed the collision to contact Cst Vickery at Airdrie RCMP Traffic Services at (403)-945-7200.

In a separate incident last Tuesday morning around 7:30 a.m., a woman was airlifted to Foothills Medical Centre in serious but non-life-threatening condition via STARS following a head-on collision on Highway 2A south of Carstairs near the Crossfield overpass.

A second driver was taken to hospital via ambulance, also in serious condition.

Police continue to investigate the matter.

Later that day around 11 p.m., a female driver of a Honda Accord heading northbound on the QEII just north of the Carstairs overpass was uninjured after the car she was driving rolled into the centre median.

The driver was not transported to hospital.

Calm Hallows-eve

Halloween revellers didn't spark too much trouble for police October 31.

Sgt. Jeff Jacobson said the detachment had additional members on the lookout for mischief but besides a few smashed pumpkins and one impaired driver, the evening was uneventful.

Thief raids truck

Not everyone behaved on Halloween night.

A thief broke into a truck parked along 23rd Avenue in Didsbury October 31 and stole an ashtray full of change, gloves, exacto knives and a snowmobile ramp. The dash of the truck was damaged during the raid.

Police are seeking any witnesses who may have seen something suspicious that evening.

WI exhibit opens at Olds museum

BY PAUL FREY
For the Review

A unique exhibit chronicling 100 years of women's institute in Alberta opened at the Mountain View Museum last week.

The exhibit features artifacts and explanations from WI and the organization's importance in the lives of women in the early days of Alberta.

The idea for the exhibit was spearheaded by Mary Riley Women's Institute member Sharon de la Mare, who got the idea from looking at old photographs of early WI participants. In the photo, contained in the book Many and Remarkable, de la Mare realized the women in the photo are her great-grandmother, grandmother and two of her aunts who were young girls at the time.

"Near the front (of the book) there was a picture of women in 1917 sitting outside with their sewing machines sewing to send things to soldiers in the war. I guess WI has been a part of our family history (for decades)," she said.

De la Mare represents the fourth generation of women in her family to participate in WI locally.

"This is partly a personal celebration and also a great achievement provincially," she said, adding that WI has enhanced not only the local community over the years, but also communities across Alberta, Canada and the world. "I think it's a really worthwhile group to belong to."

The first WI in Alberta was formed by Margaret Graham in 1909 when she moved to the province from Ontario. Rural women organized to provide education around home economics and to provide a social outlet for women. Often, they had to walk up to five miles to get to meetings, or traverse longer distances over rough roads on horseback. Early Mary Riley WI history tells of several occasions in which women became injured traversing poor roads to get to meetings.

De la Mare said in her view, the importance of WI is the educational and social aspects of the organization.

"We get to meet a lot of people in our local area and if we go to the provincial convention we meet people from all over the province and sometimes one of us will be chosen to represent the province at the federal convention," she said.

The first provincial convention for WI was organized in Olds in 1915 and for several years afterward the provincial convention was held here. Early WI and agricultural colleges such as Olds College worked hand in hand, and WI supported numerous community development projects such as libraries, as well as efforts supporting troops during both the First World War and Second World War.

The exhibit at the museum runs until Dec. 14.

It's time to talk to your MLA about health care

The Alberta Union of Provincial Employees shares your concerns about the Government of Alberta's direction for our public health care system.

Staff levels are being reduced, hospital beds are being closed across Alberta, and funding is being cut to levels that threaten the quality and safety of our health care system.

Here are four questions you should ask your MLA:

- 1) Why is the Government of Alberta making cuts to Alberta's public health care system?
- 2) Why isn't the Government of Alberta planning to add any public long-term care beds to our health care system to accommodate our aging population?
- 3) How will cuts to the health care system affect the programs I depend on?
- 4) Why is the government making funding cuts to public programs instead of cutting back on its multi-billion dollar infrastructure plan?

To contact your MLA just call the Government of Alberta's toll-free line 310-0000, from anywhere in the province.

AUPE believes, like you, that every Albertan has a right to a safe and universally accessible health care system. Let's make sure that the government knows that.

Samurai Beavers back again

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

The Sake Samurai Beavers are arriving next week in Didsbury to challenge the midget AA team to an international game.

It will be the third time the Japanese midget team has competed in town, although they have been coming to Alberta for the last 15 years.

Jeff Chomyn, who now coaches minor hockey locally, used to live and instruct in Japan over a decade ago. There had always been talk of bringing the Japanese players to Canada but it wasn't until he moved back to this country that it happened.

"In Japan hockey hasn't gained a lot of ground. It lags behind archery and table tennis," he said.

"By coming to Canada they can see how the national sport is played as far as the real deal goes...and not only at the NHL level but the grassroots stuff too."

The team first arrived in Didsbury in 2006 and although they beat the local hockey team, the tempo and skill of the Canadian players gave them the ammunition to win national championships in Japan.

"Since they started their Canadian trips they have won championships on three or four occasions. It really helps their game," Chomyn said.

Jordan Kerr, who will play the team for the second season next week, said he is looking forward to seeing the Samurai Beavers again.

"It's a really neat experience. You have this common ground of hockey and you learn about Japan and how they play down there," he said.

"And they are really good hockey players."

The team will touch down in Canada today and play in a midget AA tournament in Olds this weekend. On November 16, at 7:15 p.m., they will face the Didsbury Ramblers.

While they are in town, the Japanese team will also play floor hockey with Didsbury students and catch an NHL game. They leave November 18.

Didsbury Dragon Braden Overwater prepares for a return from the Cremona Cougars during the league finals, Wednesday.

Dragons win finals

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM
Didsbury Review

The Didsbury Dragons torched opponents in league finals last week to win a spot in regional championships.

Last Wednesday, the senior boys volleyball team faced Cremona and Olds Koinonia to determine the best in Mountain View County.

The local boys easily took the coveted title, said coach Chris Overwater.

"These kids came together and played really well...they showed leadership skills and positive attitudes out on the courts," he said.

Earlier this season, it wasn't sure how well the team would fare. It had a green roster with only three returning seniors - middle-hitters, James Lefebvre and Tyson Newton and setter Keifer Paulgaard.

Despite a large number of rookies, the team has been able to secure several wins, including silver at a round robin tournament

October 24.

On November 4, the senior boys won two sets of three against Cremona to push ahead to a game against Olds Koinonia - last year's champion team.

"Of course there were high expectations in this but we didn't know if we would actually win," said Tyson Newton.

The first set the Dragons took the win 25-21, but lost by two points in the second matchup.

"By the third game the team had really pulled together...we were at a 12-0 lead in the beginning...and they never really caught up," Overwater said.

Olds Koinonia was able to score seven points - which gave them the second-place title.

The Dragons' win secured them a spot in the regionals, November 14. The zones are November 20.

"We've become a strong team who really works hard out there," Newton said.

"I think we can only go up from here."

The Alberta government is taking steps to help protect the environment and ensure a sustainable future. One key initiative is the Alberta Climate Leadership Plan, which includes a carbon tax and investments in green infrastructure. Another important aspect is the promotion of renewable energy sources like wind and solar power. The government is also working to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gas emissions across all sectors of the economy. These actions are part of a broader commitment to combat climate change and build a cleaner, more sustainable future for Albertans.
